The conditions of contingent CP are in place: hence, there is no contingent world-creating possibility. Thus, there can be no contingent CP.

In any event, CP is a contingent when it is in place, or the contingent CP of the contingent CP.

There's no other way to understand the concept of a possible world. When we say that God can know the actual world, we mean to say that God has knowledge of all possible worlds. However, the concept of a possible world is not a direct reference to the actual world. It's a way of thinking about the relationship between the actual world and the possible worlds.

Could God have made the big bang?
Could God have made the big bang? Could He have done the work? Could there be a creator? Could He have created it all? Could it be that the big bang was not a big bang at all? Could it be that the big bang was a big bang that happened at the beginning of time? Could it be that the big bang was a big bang that happened at the end of time? Could it be that the big bang was a big bang that happened in the middle of time?
