Spielmans and Parry describe the unethical practice of ghostwriting and suggest that my company (Dianthus Medical Limited) is involved in it (Spielmans and Parry 2010). We are not. We provide professional medical writing services to high ethical standards, which is not at all the same thing as ghostwriting. It is unfortunate that Spielmans and Parry wrote about the activities of my company without taking the trouble to check their facts by contacting me first; had they done so, I could have explained to them the difference.

For some years now I have been an outspoken critic of ghostwriting (Jacobs 2004; Jacobs and Wager 2005; Adamson et al. 2008; Gøtzsche et al. 2009), and have been at the forefront of efforts by the European Medical Writers Association to raise ethical standards among professional medical writers. I find the suggestion that my company acts in an unethical manner deeply offensive.
