

Acknowledgements

Esther Oluffa Pedersen · Claus Festersen ·
Steen Brock · Stig Andur Pedersen

© Springer Science+Business Media B.V. 2009

We are grateful to the speakers of the conference on the philosophy of Ernst Cassirer held in Copenhagen June 3rd and 4th, 2005, for devoting time to write up their contributions for the purpose of this publication. To the original contributions from the conference new articles from Nordic Cassirer scholars have been added. We owe them a debt of gratitude, too. In addition, we would like to express our gratitude to Rasmus Rendsvig when encountering L^AT_EX-related problems and to Frances Bottenberg for translating Ernst Wolfgang Orth's article "Ernst Cassirer as Cultural Scientist" (originally entitled "Ernst Cassirer als Kulturwissenschaftler") from German to English. Moreover, Bottenberg has copy-edited most of the articles. We thank the National Gallery of Art for the permission to reproduce the painting by Johannes Vermeer entitled "Woman Holding a Balance." We would also like to express our gratitude to the Minneapolis Institute of Arts for the permission to reproduce the painting by Domenikos Theotokopoulos (El Greco) known under the title "Christ Driving the Money Changers from the Temple Artist." Oswald Schwemmer's contribution to this volume entitled "Event and Form. Two Themes in the Davos-Debate between Martin Heidegger and Ernst Cassirer" was originally written in German and appeared as "Ereignis und Form. Zwei Denkmotive in der Davoser Disputation zwischen Martin Heidegger und Ernst Cassirer," in D. Kaegi and E. Rudolph (eds.): Cassirer – Heidegger. 70 Jahre Davoser Disputation (Hamburg: Felix Meiner Verlag, 2002), pp. 48–65. We would like to thank Oswald Schwemmer for the right to publish it in English translation here.

Copenhagen,
February 2009

E. O. Pedersen · S. Brock
Department of Philosophy and History of Ideas, Aarhus University, Aarhus, Denmark

C. Festersen (✉) · S. A. Pedersen
Department of Philosophy and Science Studies, Roskilde University, Roskilde, Denmark
e-mail: clfe@ruc.dk