

Communication or Confrontation – Heidegger and Philosophical Method

Vincent Blok Louis Bolk Institute, Netherlands

Abstract

In this essay, we consider the philosophical method of reading and writing, of communication. Normally, we interpret the works of the great philosophers and explain them in papers and presentations. The thinking of Martin Heidegger has given us an indication of an entirely different method of philosophical thinking. In the 1930s, he gave a series of lectures on Nietzsche. In them, he calls his own way of reading and writing a confrontation (Auseinandersetzung) with Nietzsche. We consider the specific character of confrontation, and in what ways it is different from communication. First, we develop an answer to the question of how Heidegger reads Nietzsche: Does he give a charitable or a violent interpretation of Nietzsche and, if neither, how can his confrontation with Nietzsche be characterized? With this, we obtain an indication of the way we have to read Heidegger, indeed, of philosophical reading and writing as such.

Keywords

communication
 Heidegger
 Nietzsche
 philosophical method
 Will

Introduction

In Also sprach Zarathustra Nietzsche writes:

Wille zur Wahrheit heißt ihr's, ihr Weisesten, was euch treibt und brünstig macht? Wille zur Denkbarkeit alles Seienden: also heiße ich euren Willen! Alles Seiende wollt ihr erst denkbar machen: denn ihr zweifelt mit gutem Mißtrauen, ob es schon denkbar ist.

(KSA 4: 146)

When we 'read' this statement of Nietzsche, then it refers back to our own way of 'reading' it. How do we read Nietzsche and in what way is the will to truth at work in our way of reading and thinking?

We 'interpret' the text of Nietzsche and 'communicate' it in a lecture or article. Every communicative interpretation is already surrounded by the Wille zur Denkbarkeit, as far as the text is represented for thought. Representation anticipates the representability of the text, which means that the primary unity of interpretation and interpretandum, a principle of 'community', is presupposed. This anticipation is such that either the subject of our reading is subservient to its object, or the object of our reading is subservient to its subject. The former we may call a philological-reconstructive or historical reading of Nietzsche. The latter a philosophical-progressive or systematic reading – which is to say that our own philosophical question is being raised, in the light of which Nietzsche’s thinking is brought up and evaluated critically. It is along these two modes of thought that the great philosophers are read nowadays and their work is commented upon.

Every communication theory presupposes an answer to a fundamental philosophical question: is the ambition of philosophical thinking to reach a unity or community in communication, or is it searching for ways to dwell upon the unbridgeable gap or difference between the participants of communication? It is our experience that the whole point of our reading and writing is the experience of resistance, i.e. the ‘unapproachability’ of the text. This has some implications for our method of reading and writing. How can our reading and writing remain with the unapproachability of the text, without incorporating this unapproachability in its interpretation and communication? On the basis of the philosophy of Martin Heidegger I will try to make this presupposition of interpretation and communication explicit and bring it up for discussion. In this way, we further our attempt to trace the philosophical determinants of communication theory and to rethink this theory.

In the 1930s, Heidegger gave several lectures on Nietzsche. In these, he rejects the interpretative method of philosophical thinking, because every interpretation presupposes the unity of interpretation and interpretandum, like every communication. By contrast, he calls his own way of philosophical thinking a confrontation (Auseinandersetzung) with Nietzsche. I will ask what the nature of this confrontation is and what differences exist between confrontation and interpretative communication. First of all, we obtain an answer to the question of how Heidegger reads Nietzsche. Secondly, and more importantly, we obtain an indication to the nature of philosophical reading and writing as such. Philosophy, it will emerge, is a method of thinking which is capable of dwelling upon the difference between mine and thine, upon the unapproachability of the text.

In this article, I will restrict myself mainly to Heidegger’s first lecture on Nietzsche; what is at stake is primarily the specific nature of confrontation as such, which emerges in his reading of Nietzsche. Firstly, I consider the hypothesis that Heidegger gives an interpretation of Nietzsche (1). After refuting this hypothesis, I elaborate three differences between interpretative interpretation and confrontation (2). Next, we elaborate the specific nature of his concept of confrontation on the basis of an example: Heidegger’s confrontation with Nietzsche’s concept of the ‘Will’ (3). Finally, I reconsider Heidegger’s concept of confrontation in a critical evaluation (4).

1. Guiding question (Leitfrage) versus grounding question (Grundfrage)

In the first lecture about the will to power of 1936/1937, Heidegger calls attention to a vast difference between the so-called guiding question of the metaphysical tradition and his own grounding question

1. of philosophy. The 'initial commencement' (erste Anfang) of philosophical
 2. thinking is, according to Heidegger, guided by the metaphysical
 3. question about the 'being' of beings, about the 'beingness' of beings.
 4. According to Heidegger, the thought of Nietzsche also belongs to the
 5. first beginning of philosophical thinking. Although Nietzsche has a
 6. reversal of Platonism in mind and rejects the transcendental world of
 7. 'being', his own question about being remains orientated upon beings,
 8. namely earthly existence. Just as in the metaphysical tradition,
 9. Nietzsche's question of being ends up in a metaphysical description of
 10. the being of beings: will to power.

11. Contrary to this tradition, Heidegger asks after 'Being' itself, for the 12. 'meaning' or 'sense' of being (Sinn von Sein). This question is raised at
 13. the beginning of Being and Time. Here, Heidegger says that 'wir je
 14. schon in einem Seinsverständnis leben und der Sinn von Sein zugleich
 15. in Dunkel gehüllt ist'.¹ Heidegger explicitly speaks about the under-
 16. standing of 'being', that is to say that this understanding should not be
 17. confused with our understanding of 'beings'. Understanding of being
 18. doesn't mean that 'being' shows itself in the world and subsequently
 19. can be understood by thinking. The point is the being of understand-
 20. ing itself, of our understanding of things and people itself. What kind
 21. of understanding is involved in our interpretative understanding of
 22. Nietzsche? Every interpretation presupposes the principal 'accessibil-
 23. ity' of the interpreted work for the projections of thinking. That is to
 24. say that our understanding is marked by the dominion of presentness
 25. (SZ: 25). Thanks to this porosity of being and thinking, the work of
 26. Nietzsche can be interpreted in a philological-reconstructive or philo-
 27. sophical-progressive way.

28. In our natural understanding of things, the 'sense' of being stays
 29. concealed according to Heidegger. This concealment is not neutralized
 30. by a projection (Entwurf) of thinking. He calls the sense of being 'pro-
 31. jection range' (Entwurfbereich), 'worum sich Verständlichkeit von etwas
 32. hält', 'wherein the intelligibility of something maintains itself' (SZ: 151;
 33. trans. 193). This Entwurfbereich is the space between being and thinking,
 34. the openness I have to stride through to reach things in the world. Our
 35. understanding lives off this Entwurfbereich, which cannot be taken up
 36. in a projection of thinking; on the contrary it withholds itself in every
 37. thinking projection. Heidegger experiences, in other words, an incom-
 38. mensurability between understanding of beings and the sense of being,
 39. something beyond thinking which is unreachable by understanding.

40. The guiding question of philosophy leads to different configura-
 41. tions of the understanding of the being of beings – in the history of
 42. metaphysics, being is, for instance, understood as 'physis', 'object',
 43. 'will to power' – but in this, the question about the open between being
 44. and thinking, the sense of being, is forgotten and unquestioned. That
 45. is to say, that according to Heidegger, the forgetfulness of being domi-
 46. nates (GA 43: 282). In his lecture on the will to power, Heidegger asks
 47. the question about the sense of being; this is the grounding question of
 48. philosophy, because the sense is the ground for our understanding of
 49. the being of beings² and this ground of understanding, as such, is the
 50. only concern of philosophy.

1. 'We already live in an understanding of Being and that the meaning of Being is still veiled in darkness' (SZ: 4, tr. 23). Quotations in the main text are in German and translated in the notes. Further references and quotations in the notes refer to the German original.
2. 'Und Sinn ist dabei genau in seinem Begriff umgrenzt als dasjenige, von woher und auf Grund wovon das Sein überhaupt als solches offenbar werden und in die Wahrheit kommen kann' (GA 43: 21). On the ground of sense, 'being' becomes manifest, that is to say that the sense withdraws itself from manifestation.

3. 'Im folgenden Text sind "Darstellung" und "Auslegung" in-einandergearbeitet, so dass nicht überall und sogleich deutlich wird, was den Worten Nietzsche's entnommen und was dazugegan ist. Jede Auslegung muss freilich nicht nur dem Text die Sache entnehmen können, sie muss auch, ohne darauf zu pochen, unvermerkt Eigenes aus ihrer Sache dazu geben können. Diese Beigabe ist dasjenige, was der Laie, gemessen an dem, was er ohne Auslegung für den Inhalt des Textes hält, notwendig als Hineindeuten und Willkür bemängelt' (GA 50: 8–9).
4. Examples of such a reading are Michael Zimmermann and Marion Heinz: 'In Der Wille zur Macht als Kunst hatte Heidegger wenigstens zwei Absichten. Er wollte erstens zeigen, dass er seine eigene Ontologie ... von Nietzsche's Denken ableiten und dass er so Nietzsche's Denken vor den nationalsozialistischen Ideologen retten konnte' (Zimmermann 2005: 101); 'Erst und nur in seinsgeschichtlicher Blickbahn erschliesst sich die Tiefendimension von Nietzsche's Denken, d.i. die in seinem Gesagten als verborgener Grund herrschende seinsgeschichtliche Konstellation, die es in seiner eigenen geschichtlichen Notwendigkeit zu

Although Heidegger's concept of the other commencement (andere Anfang) needs further elaboration, we can already draw a negative conclusion from Heidegger's distinction between the guiding question of metaphysics and his own grounding question of philosophy: the grounding question about the sense of being is completely different from a philological-reconstructive or a philosophical-progressive interpretation of Nietzsche, because every interpretation lives off the understanding of being, and so belongs within the range (Bereich) of the metaphysical guiding question. The opening between being and thinking, the sense of being, is forgotten there and remains unquestioned. Only when the grounding question is questioned can we attain the philosophical meaning of Nietzsche's thinking.

The question now is how Heidegger reads Nietzsche, when the guiding question of metaphysics is incommensurable with the grounding question of philosophy. Is the grounding question brought to mind for Heidegger through an 'interpretation' of the guiding question of Nietzsche? What sense does the thinking of Nietzsche make for Heidegger, when guiding question and grounding question are incommensurable?

The difference between them does not reach so far that the thinking of Nietzsche becomes irrelevant for Heidegger. Although Nietzsche does not himself question the sense of being, Heidegger says that this thinking is the impetus for the grounding question (GA 44: 28; GA 43: 288). Is it possible for a reconstructive or progressive interpretation of Nietzsche to lead the way to Heidegger's question of being? We may be inclined to think so and therefore I will test this view.

In the preliminary drafts of Nietzsche's unfinished principal work, The Will to Power, Heidegger sees three fundamental positions coming up: will to power; the eternal recurrence of the same; and revaluation of all values (GA 43: 18–19). Heidegger discusses these titles and is curious about their 'unity' or connection. This unity does not speak for itself, because will to power is bound up to earthly existence of generation and corruption. This eternal 'ongoing' character of the will to power seems to contradict his other thought of the eternal recurrence. This impels Heidegger to ask for the unity of the will to power and the eternal recurrence of the same (cf. GA 43: 287–288). This is the question about the 'sense of being' as will to power, which is Heidegger's question in this first lecture on Nietzsche. If this is the case, then Heidegger gives a reconstructive interpretation of Nietzsche and, on this ground, he observes an interpretation problem – the unity of the will to power and the eternal recurrence of the same – which is offensive (Anstoß) to his own grounding question about the sense of being.

We can even say that here Heidegger gives a progressive interpretation of Nietzsche.³ He recognizes his own question about the sense of being in the thinking of Nietzsche.⁴ So in Nietzsche, he recognizes the question as to what the will to power itself is, the sense of being as will to power.⁵

1. Nothing speaks against this interpretation of the connection
2. between both questions, except Heidegger himself:

3.
4. Wenn wir Nietzsches Willen zur Macht, d.h. seine Frage nach dem Sein
5. des Seienden, in die Blickbahn der Frage nach 'Sein und Zeit' bringen,
6. dann heißt dies allerdings nicht, es werde Nietzsches Werk auf ein Buch
7. mit dem Titel 'Sein und Zeit' bezogen und nach dem, was in diesem
8. Buch steht, gedeutet und gemessen.⁶

9.
10. According to Heidegger, a progressive interpretation of Nietzsche, i.e., 11. an interpretation that opens the perspective on the grounding question
12. about the sense of being and understands the thinking of Nietzsche
13. from it (see GA 44: 27).⁷

14.
15. Von der Leitfrage zur Grundfrage gibt es nie einen unmittelbaren,
16. gleichsinnigen, die Leitfrage noch einmal (auf das Seyn) anwendenden
17. Fortgang, sondern nur einen Sprung, d.h. die Notwendigkeit eines
18. anderen Anfangs.⁸

19.
20. The transition from the metaphysical guiding question to the philo-
21. sophical grounding question cannot be made by applying the guiding
22. question to sense of being; the grounding question is something com-
23. pletely different and therefore presupposes a 'leap', according to
24. Heidegger (I will come back to this leap in what follows).

25. Heidegger can claim this, but can we substantiate Heidegger's way
26. of reading and writing about Nietzsche as something else other than
27. an interpretation of his work?⁹ The question is, then, how to character-
28. ize the relation between the thinking of Heidegger and the thinking of
29. Nietzsche: on the one hand, the grounding question of Heidegger is
30. incommensurable with the question that guides metaphysics up to
31. Nietzsche, on the other hand, Heidegger calls the thinking of Nietzsche
32. that which is offensive for his grounding question of philosophy.¹⁰ We
33. will concentrate on this difference in the next section.

34. 35. 2. Heidegger's concept of confrontation 36. (Auseinandersetzung)

37. Heidegger calls his own way of philosophical speaking an unfolding
38. (Entfaltung) of the guiding question of Nietzsche in view of his funda-
39. mental metaphysical position (Grundstellung).¹¹ This unfolding stands
40. under the sign of a confrontation (Auseinandersetzung) with the funda-
41. mental metaphysical position of Nietzsche, with his answer to the
42. guiding question of philosophical thinking.¹² We introduce now
43. three differences between an interpretation and a confrontation, to
44. elaborate this confrontation specifically by means of Heidegger's con-
45. frontation with Nietzsche in the next section.

46. First of all, every interpretation lives off the understanding of being
47. and presupposes in this way the principal identity of interpretation and
48. interpretandum (cf. Introduction). With this, it is incapable of halting at
49. any incommensurability at all. Seen from an interpretative perspective, 50. there is no principal incomparability between guiding question and begreifen gilt'

(Heinz 2005: 175).

5. According to Heidegger, Nietzsche asks what the will to power is. The Nietzsche's answer to this question is: the eternal recurrence of the same. Nietzsche calls this question about being itself his heaviest thought (GA 43: 21). We may conclude that Nietzsche already tried to think the sense of being as will to power – the eternal recurrence of the same – that is to say that he already thinks being out of time.

6. 'If we bring Nietzsche's "will to power", that is, his question concerning the Being of beings, into the perspective of the question concerning "Being and Time", that does not at all mean that Nietzsche's work is to be related to a book entitled Being and Time and that it is to be measured and interpreted according to the contents of that book' (GA: 43: 23; trans. 20).

7. Vgl. 'Angesichts eines solchen denkerischen Werkes ist es nicht zweifelhaft, ob wir es im Handumdrehen in unsere gewohnten und geläufigen "Rubriken" einzwängen dürfen oder ob ein solches Denken umgekehrt uns zur Besinnung und zur Loslösung vom Geläufigen zwingen muß' (GA 44: 72).

8. 'Going from the guiding-question to the grounding-question, there is never an immediate, equi-directional and continual process that once again applies the guiding-question (to be-ing); rather, there is only a leap, i.e., the necessity of an other beginning' (GA 65: 76; trans. 53).
9. With this question, we turn against interpreters like Wolfgang Müller-Lauter, who see Heidegger's reading of Nietzsche as indeed rooted in an 'Andersverstehen', but understand this as a progressive Nietzsche-interpretation: 'Aus der von ihm genannten "innigsten Verwandtschaft" heraus erfährt sein Denken gleichwohl immer wieder Anregungen durch Nietzsche, von denen kaum zu sagen ist, ob Heidegger in ihnen eine Bestätigung des von ihm zuvor selbst Gedachten gefunden hat oder ob sie seine Überlegungen vorgängig angeregt haben. Letztlich werden sie in sein Eigenes hineinverwandelt' (Müller-Lauter 1996: 124). With Jeffrey Powel, we turn ourselves against this view on Heidegger: 'Obwohl es wahr ist, dass Heidegger's Nietzsche-Interpretation auf eine Weise begann, die Müller-Lauter und seinen wissenschaftlichen Prinzipien entsprach, sollten grounding question, rather the grounding question is the result of Heidegger's 'critique' of the one-sidedness of the guiding question of metaphysics and the grounding question exists in a counter-movement against the guiding question. Such a critique or counter-movement presupposes the principal comparability of both questions.

However, Heidegger suggests the contrary (GA 65: 187). Just because both questions are incomparable, he bids farewell to interpretation. His confrontation (Auseinandersetzung) makes an effort to halt at the difference (auseinander) of the guiding question and the grounding question, without reconciling this difference or aiming to neutralize it in a higher identity

Jede echte Auslegung ist Auseinander-setzung im wörtlichen Sinne; sie muß das Auszulegende in es selbst und seinen eigenen Grund zurückstellen und dadurch erst wird der Ausleger seinerseits in seine Blickstellung verwiesen.¹³

The confrontation, is in other words, not controlled by the logic of identity as in interpretation, but by a logic of difference;¹⁴ the point is the 'difference' between me and the other.

This difference does not show itself by criticising the other, but by considering it and tracing it in its effective force (GA 43: 6). In this confrontation, the confronter at the same time is relegated to his perspective (Blickstellung), in the case of Heidegger in the grounding question about the sense of being. Only in this confrontation, the auseinander of guiding question and grounding question emerges.

Yet, Heidegger speaks of a confrontation with Nietzsche in this lecture and he does not unfold his completely 'new' question about the sense of being autonomously. That means that Heidegger, notwithstanding the primacy of the grounding question, depends on the guiding question of Nietzsche. In which sense is this the case?

That Heidegger does speak about an 'other commencement' shows that the grounding question is indeed thoroughly differentiated from the guiding question of metaphysics, but on the other hand is related to the 'same'; it concerns an 'other' commencement of the 'same', namely the philosophical question about being. Our first determination of the confrontation, that it is controlled by a logic of difference, needs therefore a slight modification. The grounding question is indeed differentiated but not completely disconnected from the guiding question. Both are involved in the question about being, that is to say that the confrontation has the Auseinander-setzung (difference) within the same (identity) in mind.¹⁵ The confrontation is, in other words, controlled by a logic of 'iteration'.¹⁶

With this further determination of the confrontation, it has indeed become clear why the grounding question of Heidegger depends on the guiding question of metaphysics. But until now it has not been clear why Heidegger has to rely specifically on the guiding question of Nietzsche. The confrontation has to go via Nietzsche according to Heidegger because we do not have enough distance, do not have an aus-einander to his way of thinking (GA 43: 281); 'Nietzsche is

1. therefore the place and source, at which real confrontation has to take
 2. place' (GA 29/30: 107). The thinking of the initial commencement is
 3. still too contemporary for us¹⁷ and the confrontation with Nietzsche
 4. is, as such, primarily a confrontation with ourselves. The confronta-
 5. tion with Nietzsche concerns therefore our abendländisches Schicksal
 6. (GA 43: 281).

7. With this, a second difference between an interpretation and a con-
 8. frontation comes to light. An interpretation takes a position or stand-
 9. point, out of which the 'interpretandum' is represented. This standpoint
 10. is the ground or the subject of interpretation, which itself is not
 11. involved in interpretation. On the contrary, the confrontation is prima-
 12. rily the confrontation with our 'ownmost'; the interpretative subject.
 13. Our thinking is, in other words, 'involved' (einbegriffen) in the confron-
 14. tation. Not only Nietzsche, but we all live off the guiding question of
 15. metaphysics (GA 43: 280) and are as such marked by the forgetfulness
 16. of being. The confrontation with Nietzsche is necessary, in order that 17. we become 'free' for the highest effort of our thinking, namely the
 18. question about the sense of being as another commencement of philo-
 19. sophy, according to Heidegger (GA 43: 20, 281). (I will return to this
 20. concept of freedom in section 4.) For that, we say farewell to ourselves
 21. as the interpretative subject – the jump-off of the subject as the ground
 22. for the understanding of being – in favour of that human mode of
 23. existence, which exposes itself to the sense of being (Dasein). Only
 24. when we understand that, we are involved in the initial commence-
 25. ment that culminates in the work of Nietzsche; his work is the 'größte
 26. Anstoß zur höchsten Auseinandersetzung, zum geistigen Kampf' (GA
 27. 44: 28).¹⁸ It is the sense of being, which is at stake in the confrontation
 28. between the initial and the other commencement.

29. With this, we encounter a third and last difference between an
 30. interpretation and a confrontation. An interpretation presupposes a
 31. priori the presence-at-hand of the interpretandum, which has already
 32. appropriated its presence. That our philosophical thinking is involved
 33. in the guiding question means on the contrary, that we cannot claim to
 34. possess the other commencement of philosophical questioning as
 35. our property. The overcoming of the forgetfulness of being presup-
 36. poses primarily a basic experience (Grunderfahrung) of the sense of
 37. being (GA 43: 279). This basic experience brings Heidegger to his
 38. grounding question of philosophy and to the localization of the first
 39. commencement of philosophical thinking in Nietzsche (GA 43: 285):

40.
 41. Die Auslegung dagegen und das leitende und doch verschwiegene
 42. Fragen kommen aus der Erfahrung der Ankunft des anderen Anfanges
 43. der Philosophie.

(GA 43: 290).¹⁹

44.
 45.
 46. Here, we see the eventual or momentous character of confrontation,
 47. the farewell of the metaphysical guiding question and the 'leap' in the
 48. grounding question, which has to happen every time again and has to
 49. be attempted by everyone for himself. This is what is at stake in the 50. confrontation between both questions.

wir immer dessen eingedenk bleiben, dass Heidegger sich niemals als durch akzeptierte Interpretationsmethoden und deren Prinzipien begrenzt ansah' (Powel 2005: 118).

10. In a lecture about the fundamental metaphysical position of Nietzsche from 1937, Heidegger even says that the thinking of Nietzsche forced him to say farewell to the usual way of thinking – i.e., the farewell of the guiding question – and to reflect (Besinnung) on the grounding question of philosophy (GA 44: 72).

11. In the context of this article, we cannot elaborate the unfolding any further. When we speak of Auseinandersetzung in this article, in fact an entfaltende Auseinandersetzung is at stake.

12. 'Die Fragenden selbst und die, die innerhalb der Bereiche der jeweiligen Antwort auf die Leitfrage ihr wesentliches Wissen und Handeln gestalten und begründen, haben mit der Leitfrage – mag sie als solche gewubt werden oder nicht – im Seienden im Ganzen und im Verhältnis zum Seienden als solchem eine Stellung bezogen. Weil diese Stellung aus der Leitfrage und mit ihr entspringt und weil die Leitfrage das eigentlich Metaphysische in der Metaphysik ist, nennen wir diese mit der selbst nicht entfalteten Leitfrage sich ergebende Stellung die metaphysische Grundstellung' (GA 44: 212–213). What is the being of beings? Will to power. What is at stake in the confrontation between guiding question and grounding question is the confrontation with the fundamental metaphysical position of Nietzsche, which is his answer on the guiding question.

13. 'Every real explanation is con-frontation in a literal sense; it has to put back the explanandum in its own ground and with this, the interpreter for his part is relegated to his perspective' (GA 90: 37; vgl. GA 44: 150).
14. 'Denn das Verstehen macht sich nicht so, wie wenn aus einem gefüllten Glas Wein der Inhalt in ein noch leeres umgegossen wird, sondern Verstehen wird nur dort, wo die wesentlich Verstehenden selbst von sich aus dem neuen Gedanken entgegenwachsen und aus der Selbstständigkeit ihrer Not den neuen Fragen entgegenfragen, um sie erst so als neue zu ergreifen und damit sich selbst in die höhere Klarheit zu verk-lären' (GA 44: 150).
15. 'Die Schärfe der Auseinandersetzung ist hier nur möglich,

3. The concept of the will

Now that we have considered what the difference is between confrontation and interpretation, the question concerning the 'substratum' of Heidegger's confrontation with Nietzsche arises. With what exactly does the thinking of Heidegger confront itself?

Heidegger says that all great thinkers think the 'same', because they are all connected to the one question about 'being' (GA 43: 43). Where do we have to look for 'being'? The confrontation confronts itself with 'being', as it shows itself in the 'philosophical concepts' of Nietzsche:

Erkennen und Wissen, das ist nicht bloße Kenntnis der Begriffe, sondern ist Begreifen des im Begriff Ergriffenen, das Sein begreifen, d.h. dem Angriff des Seins wissentlich ausgesetzt bleiben.²⁰

Not the standpoint of Nietzsche, but his philosophical concepts are the 'substratum' for Heidegger's confrontation, which means that the philosophical thinking of Heidegger is linguistically determined.²¹ The philosophical concepts are namely drawn out of, and hold themselves to, that of which they speak – 'being' – according to Heidegger.²²

Although all great philosophers think the same according to Heidegger, our elaboration of the guiding question and the grounding question in the preceding paragraphs also made clear how different the Sache des Denkens is for each thinker. When the philosophical concepts are drawn out of this Sache, which is the same and at the same time different, then also the philosophical concepts are extremely ambiguous.²³ Out of this, we conclude that the greatness of the great thinkers exists in the ambiguity of their concepts, which, on the one hand, belongs in the guiding question of metaphysical tradition and on the other hand are witnesses of the other commencement of philosophical thinking.²⁴

The greatness of the thinking of Nietzsche is that his concepts are not univocally at home in the first commencement of philosophical thinking. This ambiguity or undecidedness of Nietzsche shows that he is already on his way to a reflection about the sense of being, and is 'transitive' to this question.²⁵

Exactly this ambiguity of Nietzsche's concept of 'being', which is the ambiguity between first and other commencement, impels Heidegger to a 'confrontation' with his concepts. We will elaborate on this now by means of an example from Heidegger's lecture on the will to power as art, given in 1936–1937.

In the second chapter of this first lecture about Nietzsche, Heidegger brings up Nietzsche's concept of the will. What does Nietzsche, according to Heidegger, mean with his concept of the will?²⁶ Will to power is his answer to the metaphysical question what beings as such are. According to Heidegger, that the will is occupied with 'beings as such' means that this concept cannot be derived from a region of things or circumstances in the world:

Wenn nach Nietzsche der Wille als Wille zur Macht der Grundcharakter alles Seienden ist, dann können wir uns bei der Bestimmung des Wesens des Willens nicht auf ein bestimmtes Seiendes, auch nicht auf eine

1. besondere Seinsweise berufen, um von daher das Wesen des Willens zu
2. 'erklären'.²⁷

3.
4. Heidegger elucidates this by means of an example: usually, we take
5. will to be a faculty of the soul.²⁸ The soul then is distinct from body
6. and mind. But when the will determines the being of every sort of
7. being, then it is not a 'faculty' of the soul. The soul itself then is already
8. willing, inasmuch as it is. This does not hold only for the soul, because
9. also body and mind are willing, inasmuch as they are. The will there-
10. fore cannot be understood as a faculty of the soul. But neither can the
11. will be understood as a faculty of the soul. Every faculty is capability-
12. to-something and therefore already a power or might to do something.
13. The will cannot be understood as a faculty therefore, because the being
14. of a faculty is already marked by the will to power. 'Wenn der Wille
15. zur Macht das Sein selbst kennzeichnet, gibt es nichts mehr, als was
16. der Wille noch zu bestimmen wäre. Wille ist Wille'.²⁹

17. He connects this concept to other concepts like 'affect' and 'feeling'.
18. Usually, we link these psychological terms together with the human
19. being as the subject that is willing. But according to Heidegger, this
20. link is not justified.³⁰ Nietzsche says that the will is something compli-
21. cated, something that is a unity only as a word. He does not presup-
22. pose a fixed concept of the will but this concept remains forever the
23. actual object of his search:

24.
25. Soviel ist gewiß, daß für Nietzsche zunächst – bei der Vieldeutigkeit
26. des Willensbegriffes und bei der Vielfältigkeit der herrschenden
27. Begriffsbestimmungen – kein anderer Weg blieb, als mit Hilfe
28. des Bekannten das von ihm Gemeinte zu verdeutlichen und das
29. Nichtgemeinte abzuwehren.³¹

30.
31. That Nietzsche determines the will as affect or feeling does not mean
32. anything, according to Heidegger. He does not give an answer to the
33. question what an affect is and only says that it is a form of the will to
34. power.³²

35. According to Heidegger, this answer of Nietzsche's requires us to
36. elaborate the will to power from our understanding of the concept of
37. the affect. Thus we can determine Nietzsche's concept of the will
38. according to Heidegger.

39.
40. Nur in der Auseinandersetzung erwächst die schöpferische Auslegung,
41. diejenige, durch die Nietzsche auf sich selbst in seiner stärksten Stellung
42. zu stehen kommt

(GA 43: 275–276)³³

43.
44.
45. And here we obtain an indication to the specific character of Heidegger's
46. confrontation with the language of Nietzsche, namely that it is the
47. creative explanation of his concepts. Such an explanation has nothing to
48. do with a critique or improvement of his concept of the will or with
49. the affects as psychological phenomena.³⁴ The creative explanation of
50. the will is differentiating, namely the destruction (Zerstörung) of the first

wenn getragen
von der innigsten Verwantschaft,
nur wo das Ja zum Wesentlichen'
(GA 43: 277).

16. 'Iter, derechef, viendrait de itara,
autre en sanskrit,
et tout ce qui suit
peut être lu comme l'exploitation de cette logique qui lie la répétition à l'altérité' (Derrida 1972: 375).

17. Nietzsche's denken und Sagen ist uns
noch zu gegen-wärtig. Er und wir sind noch nicht
hinreichend weit
auseinandergesetzt, damit sich der
Abstand bilden
kann, aus dem eine Würdigung dessen
zum Reifen kommt,
was die innerste
Stärke des Denkens
dieses Denkers
ist. Es bedarf der Auseinandersetzung
mit Nietzsche'
(GA 43: 6; vgl.
GA 90: 253).

18. 'Greatest impetus to the highest confrontation, to spiritual combat'.

19. 'The explanation by contrast and the guiding though concealed questions comes out of the experience of the arrival of the other commencement of philosophy'.

20. 'To be cognizant, to know, is not mere familiarity with concepts. Rather, it is to grasp what the concept itself
catches hold of.
To grasp Being means to remain knowingly exposed to its sudden advance, its presenting' (GA 43:
69; trans. 59).

21. Here is not the place to elaborate the central role of language in the early and later thinking of Heidegger. For this, see Blok (2005).
22. 'Ein Begriff ist kein Begriff – in der Philosophie wenigstens nicht –, wenn er nicht so gegründet und begründet ist, daß er das, was er begreift, für sich zum Maß und zur Bahn des Fragens werden läßt, statt es in der Gestalt einer bloßen Formel zuzudecken' (GA 43: 69).
23. 'Aber Zarathustra erkennt: In Wahrheit sind Worte und Töne Regenbögen und Schein-Brücken zwischen Ewig-Geschiedenem (VI, 316). Und wo das Ähnlichste im Gespräch genannt wird und es sich so anhört, als sei es das Gleiche, da wird am schönsten gelogen: denn die kleinste Kluft ist am schwersten zu überbrücken' (GA 44: 55). The kleinste Kluft means that the same word always has a different meaning.
24. 'Der große Denker ist dadurch groß, daß er aus dem Werk der anderen Großenbihr Größtes herauszuhören und dieses ursprünglich zu verwandeln vermag' (GA 43: 42).
25. 'Nietzsche ist ein Übergang – das Höchste, was von einem Denker gesagt werden kann. Ein Übergang, der Übergänge einleitet zum zweiten Anfang' (GA 43: 278; vgl. 283; vgl. GA 45: commencement and the erection (auslegende Aufbau) of the question of being in the sense of another commencement (GA 43: 279). We will try to follow the specific method of Heidegger here.
- Heidegger says that the essence of the creative explanation of the concept of the will consists in a 'having-to-destruct'.
- Und die größte Zerstörung greift an gegen den Schaffenden selbst. Er zuerst muß aufhören, sein eigener Zeitgenosse zu sein, weil er am wenigsten sich selbst gehört, sondern dem Werden des Seins (GA 43: 274)³⁵
- What is destructed is that 'meaning' of the concept of the will, which is bound up to human existence as subjectivity. We are involved ourselves in this destruction of the concept of the will, because it aims primarily at the creator itself and is therefore our farewell to human existence as subjectivity.
- At the same time, what is at stake for Heidegger is to differentiate a different possible meaning in this same concept of the will: the will as a way human existence (Dasein) ex-ists and its exposure to the openness and concealment of beings, i.e., the sense of being. With regard to the concept of the will, we have to see according to Heidegger:
- daß es sich hier überhaupt nicht um Psychologie, auch nicht um eine durch Physiologie und Biologie unterbaute Psychologie handelt, sondern um Grundweisen, in denen das menschliche Dasein beruht, um die Weise, wie der Mensch das 'Da', die Offenheit und Verborgenheit des Seienden, in denen er steht, besteht.³⁶
- In the destructive-creative confrontation with the concepts of Nietzsche, it comes to the erection of the other commencement, i.e., our transformation and transition from subject to ex-istence (Dasein).³⁷
- How can the concept of the will concretely speaking be stretched in such a way, that it can bear reference to the ex-istence (Dasein)? An affect, for instance a passion, 'assaults or seizes us': it brings excitement, and lifts us up beyond ourselves. We then say: he is out of his senses. According to Heidegger, Nietzsche has this essential moment in the concept of the affect in mind – this being outside oneself – when he calls will an affect. As willing-out-beyond-itself, the will is outside itself, ecstatic. This is the first essential moment in the concept of the affect.
- According to Heidegger, Nietzsche also has the other essential moment in the concept of the affect in mind – the fact that a passion comes over us, 'assaults' us, seizes us – when he calls will an affect. That the will assaults us does not mean that we first exist and then we will something. We are always within the scope of the will, even when we are unwilling, as far as the Entschlossenheit to the openness is at stake here.
- Jenes eigentliche Wollen im Aufbruch der Entschlossenheit, dieses Ja ist es, durch das jener Anfall des ganzen Wesens an uns und in uns kommt³⁸

1. The real willing as willing-out-beyond-itself, as ecstatic exposure
 2. (Entschlossenheit) is not of all time, but the farewell of the subject
 3. and the transition to that human existence, that exists the sense of
 4. being (Dasein).

5. With the concept of Entschlossenheit, Heidegger brings one of his
 6. own basic concepts of Being and Time in connection with Nietzsche's
 7. concept of the will. Normally, this word means resoluteness and indi-
 8. cates the resoluteness of the will of the subject. Literally nevertheless,
 9. Entschlossenheit means Ent-schlossenheit, 'unclosedness', i.e., not
 10. exactly will as the resoluteness of the subject, but exposure to the
 11. openness and concealment of beings, the sense of being.³⁹ Heidegger's
 12. confrontation with the concept of the will destructs the subjective
 13. meaning of the will and stretches the concept so much, that the
 14. essence of the will indicates the ecstatic existence and opening up of
 15. the openness.⁴⁰

16.
 17. Der Wille als das Über-sich-Herrsein ist niemals eine Abkapselung des Ich
 18. auf seine Zustände, sondern Wille ist, wie wir sagen, Ent-schlossenheit,
 19. in der sich der Wollende am weitesten hinausstellt in das Seiende, um es
 20. im Umkreis seines Verhaltens festzuhalten.⁴¹

21. 4. The test of Heidegger's confrontation with Nietzsche

22. Now that we have elaborated the specific essence of the confrontation
 23. by means of the example of the will, we come back to the three charac-
 24. teristics of the confrontation and draw a number of conclusions.

25. The example of the will has shown that the concepts of Nietzsche
 26. cannot be read ambiguously just like that. They can be read in two dif-
 27. ferentiated directions, namely in the direction of the human being as
 28. the subject of the will on the one hand, and in the direction of the reso-
 29. lute openness to the sense of being on the other hand. The concepts of
 30. Nietzsche are undecided; this reflects the undecidedness of the question
 31. 'who we in essence are'. This corresponds with the second character of
 32. the confrontation, which we separated in section two, namely the fact
 33. that our thinking is 'involved' (einbegriffen) in confrontation. Is it self-
 34. evident that the human being is the subject which is the ground of the
 35. dominion of the earth: will to power? Or is human existence primarily
 36. the resolute openness to the words or concepts that mark the way
 37. things appear and the way we people respond to it: will to power?
 38. That we are 'involved' in this confrontation means that we do not play
 39. with words, but that our farewell to the interpretative subject and our
 40. transition to human existence (Dasein) are at stake here.

41. This confrontation has in mind to alter (verwandeln) the ambiguity
 42. or undecidedness (Unentschiedenheit) in a decision (Entscheidung),
 43. namely the separation (Scheidung) or out-of-one-another (auseinander)
 44. of first and other commencement and with this, of subject and Dasein.
 45. The only real task of the confrontation with Nietzsche is, according to
 46. Heidegger, 'the will to prepare the decisions, which the West approaches
 47. in this and the coming century'.⁴²

48. That thinking is involved in confrontation entails that the transition
 49. to the other commencement is not a decision of the human being as 50.

133–135). Heidegger is of two minds, because on the other hand, he says that Nietzsche is the end of metaphysics, and as such obstructs the other commencement of philosophy. For the development of Heidegger's ambiguous relation with Nietzsche in the thirties, see Blok (2008).

26. We have to stress that we do not thematize Nietzsche's own concept of the will, but its 'reception' by Heidegger. In this article, we can only refer to Nietzsche's own understanding of the will in the notes.

27. 'If according to Nietzsche will as will to power is the basic character of all beings, then in defining the essence of will we cannot appeal to a particular being or special mode of Being which would serve to explain the essence of will' (GA 43: 44; trans. 37).

28. See for example Nietzsche's own destruction of the will as faculty of the soul (KSA 531–34).

29. 'If will to power characterizes Being itself, there is nothing else that will can be defined as. Will is will' (GA 43: 45; trans. 38). Nietzsche's own destruction of the will in Jenseits von Gut und Böse seems to be comparable with this: 'Wille kann natürlich nur auf Wille wirken – und nicht auf Stoffe (nicht auf Nerven zum Beispiel –): genug, man muss die Hypothese wagen, ob nicht überall, wo Wirkungen anerkannt werden, Wille auf Wille wirkt – und ob nicht alles mechanische Geschehen, insofern eine Kraft darin tätig wird, eben Willenskraft, Willens-Wirkung ist' (KSA 54–55).

30. A first indication of this we saw before: according to Heidegger – in this lecture at least – Nietzsche doesn't link his concept of the will together with a 'being' at all, so also not with human being as the subject that is willing: 'Der Wille als das Über-sich-Herrssein ist niemals eine Abkapselung des Ich auf seine Zustände ...' (GA 43: 56).
31. 'This much is certain: for Nietzsche there was at the time no other alternative – given the ambiguity of the concepts of will and the multiplicity of prevailing conceptual definitions – than to clarify what he meant with the help of what was familiar and to reject what he did not mean' (GA 43: 46; trans. 39).
32. In fact, this is not true, because Nietzsche explains the will to power out of his reflection on the essence of the affective (vgl. KSA: 54–55). In a note he concludes: 'Daß der Wille zur Macht die primitive Affekt-Form ist, daß alle anderen Affekte nur seine subject. That is why Heidegger on the one hand speaks about a leap of being (Seinssprung) – i.e. a 'leap' in the transition to the other commencement of philosophical thinking – and on the other hand a thinking 'preparation' of this other commencement (GA 43: 283). This preparation consists in a confrontation with the concepts of Nietzsche and tests its transitivity. That 'Will' means Entschlossenheit is not an invention of the human being as the subject of thinking, but this thought comes over thinking in the thinking preparation of it. With regard to the thinking of Nietzsche, we read:

Der Wiederkunftsgedanke war nicht aus anderen Sätzen errechnet und erschlossen, er kam; aber er kam nur, wie alle großen Gedanken, weil er – ungeahnt – doch durch eine lange Arbeit vorbereitet und erlitten war. ... Der Blickbereich, in den da der Denker hineinblickt, ist jedoch nicht mehr der Horizont seiner 'persönlichen Erlebniss', sondern ein anderes als er selbst, was unter und über ihm hinweggegangen und fortan da-ist, was nicht mehr ihm, dem Denker, gehört, sondern dem er zugehört.⁴³

Precisely in this way, Heidegger is not the subject of his concept of the will as Entschlossenheit (resolute exposure), but this thought comes over thinking, or not.⁴⁴

Because the preparing leap in the other commencement of thinking can succeed but can also be unsuccessful, Heidegger calls his own way of thinking an attempt (versuchen): 'Die neuen Denker müssen Versuchenden sein, d.h. sie müssen das Seiende selbst hinsichtlich seines Seins und seiner Wahrheit fragend auf die Probe stellen und in die Versuchung bringen'.⁴⁵ This attempt is the test of the transitionability of the concepts Wille and Entschlossenheit and with this of the suitability of these words to be used for the other commencement of philosophical thinking. The first and only touchstone for this test is the Sache des Denkens itself, i.e., the sense of being (vgl. GA 43: 69): 'Die Härte und Verbindlichkeit des Denkens muß eine Gründung in den Sachen selbst erfahren, wie sie die bisherige Philosophie nicht kannte'.⁴⁶ The philosophical test consists in the question if will as resolute openness effectively marks our existence.

Einen wesentlichen Gedanken von dieser Art wahrhaft denken, heißt, in die neue Klarheit, die der Gedanke eröffnet, eingehen und in ihrem Lichte stehend alle Dinge sehen und mit dem ganzen Willen zu allen darin beschlossenen Entscheidungen in sie einrücken.⁴⁷

In this concept of attempting, we recognize the momentous character of confrontation, which we saw in section two. This eventual character of the confrontation shows that Heidegger cannot perform the leap in the other commencement for us, but that we have to test it for ourselves over and over again. Only when we see that the human being is not the subject of thinking but is exposed to the sense of being in the continuous test of our preparing confrontation with it, we are 'at home in genuine questioning' (GA 43: 7; trans. 6).⁴⁸

1. When we really become involved with such a confrontation, then
 2. this has consequences for the way we read Heidegger. When
 3. Heidegger cannot perform the leap in the other commencement for us
 4. and we have to test the transitivity by ourselves over and over again,
 5. then the confrontation should also characterize our philosophical
 6. thinking and questioning. What is demanded from us is that we leave
 7. interpretation behind and become involved with the confrontation
 8. between being and thinking. Can we claim we have performed such a
 9. confrontation with Heidegger in this article? Or have we simply
 10. stayed on the level of an interpretation of Heidegger's understanding
 11. of this concept?

12. Corresponding to the first characteristic of the confrontation, a con-
 13. frontation with Heidegger would demand from us the experience of a
 14. vast difference between him and ourselves. In what else would the
 15. Anstoß for such a confrontation exist than in his concept of confronta-
 16. tion itself?

17. Although we characterized the auseinander as a difference between 18. first and other commencement, this auseinander seems to be oriented to
 19. unity. Heidegger does not just speak of the farewell to the subject, but
 20. of destruction (Zerstörung), i.e., 'destruction' of the subject. In his
 21. confrontation with Nietzsche, all that matters for Heidegger is to get
 22. 'distance' to Nietzsche. Because he distances himself from the first
 23. commencement through the destruction of the subject, his thinking
 24. becomes free for its utmost effort, namely the questioning of the
 25. grounding question and with this the transition to Da-sein (GA 43: 6).
 26. The confrontation destructs the subject and ends up in the freedom of 27. thinking, namely a thinking that is 'released' from the subject. Although
 28. we saw that the confrontation is governed by a logic of difference,
 29. Heidegger's understanding of it – at least in this lecture – seems to be
 30. overshadowed by a logic of identity; the confrontation purifies the first
 31. commencement out, ends up in the creative explanation (schöpferische
 32. Auslegung) of the other commencement and consists therefore in the
 33. transcendence to this other commencement (vgl. ZSF: 394). That means
 34. that Heidegger's reading of Nietzsche, notwithstanding his efforts to
 35. say farewell to the interpretation of his work, is in fact overshadowed
 36. by the Wille zur Denkbarkeit, the will to 'thinkability', which character-
 37. ize every communication and interpretation.

38. Is it possible that Heidegger's creative explanation of Wille as Ent-
 39. schlossenheit is still dominated by the will to identity? Is it possible that
 40. the desire for identity is inherently bound up to the concept of the
 41. will?⁴⁹ If so, then we do not only have a notion that the will as such
 42. obstructs the resolute exposure to the sense of being, but also enough
 43. reason to confront ourselves with the pro-position, the Satz and its
 44. setzen in philosophy.

45. References

46. Blok, V. (2005), Rondom de vloedlijn. Filosofie en kunst in het machinale tijdperk.
 47. Een confrontatie tussen Heidegger en Jünger, Uitgeverij Aspekt: Soesterberg.
 48. Blok, V. (2008), 'Nietzsche als einde en als overgang. Heideggers confrontatie
 49. met Nietzsche in de dertiger jaren', Tijdschrift voor filosofie, 4, pp. 763–786.
 50.

Ausgestaltungen sind' (KSA 13: 14[121]). Gerard Visser shows that Heidegger discussion of affectivity in relation to Nietzsche is insufficient (Visser 1987: 53; vgl. 52–67). In this article, we restrict ourselves to the thinking of Nietzsche's, as it is received by Heidegger.

33. 'Only in confrontation, the creative explanation (schöpferische Auslegung) is developing, by which Nietzsche becomes positioned on his own and in his strongest position'.
34. „aber Auseinandersetzung ist etwas völlig anderes: den Gegner wählen und sich und ihn gegeneinander in Stellung bringen, und zwar zu einem Kampf um das Wesentlichste' (GA 43: 276). Dit wezenlijkste is het 'zijn', zoals dat in het ambigue begrip van de wil van zich blijkt geeft.
35. 'And the greatest destruction rises up against the creator himself. First of all he has to stop to be his own contemporary, because he least of all belongs to himself, but to the becoming of being'.
36. 'That here it is not a matter of psychology, nor even for a psychology undergirded by physiology and biology. It is a matter of the basic modes that constitute Dasein, a matter of the ways man confronts the Da, the openness and concealment of

- beings, in which he stands' (GA 43: 52; trans. 45).
37. Aber diese Unterschiede der Sprache beherrscht man nicht dadurch, daß man sie sich äußerlich anlernt und merkt, sondern nur so, daß wir aus der Auseinandersetzung mit der Sache selbst in das gewachsene Wort selbst hineinwachsen' (GA 44: 26).
38. 'That genuine willing which surges forward in resolutenes (Entschlossenheit), that 'yes', is what instigates the seizure of our entire being, of the very essence within us' (GA 43: 54–55; trans. 47).
39. 'Das Wesen des Wollens wird hier in die Ent-schlossenheit zurückgenommen. Aber das Wesen der Ent-schlossenheit liegt in der Ent-borgenheit des menschlichen Daseins für die Lichtung des Seins und keineswegs in einer Kraftspeicherung des Agierens. Vgl. Sein und Zeit §44 und §60. Der Bezug zum Sein aber ist das Lassen (GA 40: 23). Die in Sein und Zeit gedachte Ent-schlossenheit ist nicht die decidierte Aktion eines Subjekts, sondern die Eröffnung des Daseins aus der Befangenheit im Seienden zur Offenheit des Seins' (UKW: 55).
40. 'Im Wesen des Willens, der Entschlossenheit,
- Heidegger, M. (SZ), Sein und Zeit (Tübingen: Max Niemeyer Verlag 1927–1993); Translation: Being and Time, (trans. J. Macquarrie, E. Robinson), New York: Harper & Row. 1.
- Heidegger, M. (ZSF), 'Zur Seinsfrage', in Wegmarken, Gesamtausgabe Band 9, Frankfurt a.M.: Vittorio Klostermann 1976. 2.
- Heidegger, M. (UKW), 'Ursprung des Kunstwerkes', in Holzwege, Gesamtausgabe Band 5, Frankfurt a.M.: Vittorio Klostermann 1977. 3.
- Heidegger, M. (GA 29/30), Die Grundbegriffe der Metaphysic. Welt – Endlichkeit – Einsamkeit, Gesamtausgabe Band 29/30, Frankfurt a.M.: Vittorio Klostermann 1983. 4.
- Heidegger, M. (GA 40), Einführung in die Metaphysik, Gesamtausgabe Band 40, Frankfurt a.M.: Vittorio Klostermann 1983. 5.
- Heidegger, M. (GA 43), Nietzsche: Der Wille zur Macht als Kunst, Gesamtausgabe Band 43 (Frankfurt a.M.: Vittorio Klostermann 1985); translation, Nietzsche, volumes one and two (trans. D. F. Krell), San Francisco: Harper 1991. 6.
- Heidegger, M. (GA 44), Nietzsche's metaphysische Grundstellung im abend-ländischen Denken: Die ewige Wiederkehr des Gleichen, Gesamtausgabe Band 44 (Frankfurt a.M.: Vittorio Klostermann 1986); translation, Nietzsche, volumes one and two (trans. D. F. Krell), San Francisco: Harper 1991. 7.
- Heidegger, M. (GA 45), Grundfragen der Philosophie, Ausgewählte "Probleme" der "Logik", Gesamtausgabe Band 45 (Frankfurt a.M.: Vittorio Klostermann 1984–1992). 8.
- Heidegger, M. (GA 50), Nietzsche's Metaphysik II. Einleitung in die Philosophie. Denken und Dichten, Gesamtausgabe Band 50, Frankfurt a.M.: Vittorio Klostermann 1990. 9.
- Heidegger, M. (GA 65), Beiträge zur Philosophie (Vom Ereignis), Gesamtausgabe Band 65 (Frankfurt a.M.: Vittorio Klostermann 1989–1994); translation, Contributions to Philosophy (from Enowning), (trans. P. Emad, K. Maly), Bloomington Indianapolis: Indiana University Press 1999. 10.
- Heidegger, M. (GA 90), Zu Ernst Jünger, Gesamtausgabe Band 90, Frankfurt a.M.: Vittorio Klostermann 2004. 11.
- Heinz, M. (2005), 'Schaffen Die Revolution von Philosophie. Zu Heidegger's Nietzsche-Interpretation (1936/37)', in Heidegger Jahrbuch 2, Heidegger und Nietzsche, Freiburg/München: Alber Verlag, pp. 174–193. 12.
- Müller-Lauter, W. (1996), 'Heidegger's Nietzsche-Lektüre: Zum Problem des Nihilismus', in Synthesis Philosophica, Band 11. 13.
- Nietzsche, F. (KSA), Kritische Studienausgabe, Munchen Berlin: dtv/de Gruyter 1882/1887–1988. 14.
- Oudemans, Th. C. W. (1998), Ernüchterung des Denkens oder der Abschied der Onto-Theologie, Berlin: Duncker & Humblot. 15.
- Powell, J. L. (2005), 'Die Nietzsche-Vorlesungen im Rahmen des Denkweges Martin Heidegger's', in A. Denker, M. Heinz, J. Sallis, B.Vedder, H. Zaborowski (eds), Heidegger-Jahrbuch 2. Heidegger und Nietzsche, Freiburg/München: Alber Verlag, pp. 117–131. 16.
- Visser, G. T. M. (1989), Nietzsche en Heidegger. Een confrontatie, Nijmegen: SUN. 17.
- Zimmermann, M. E. (2005), 'Die Entwicklung von Heidegger's Nietzsche-Interpretation', in A. Denker, M. Heinz, J. Sallis, B.Vedder, H. Zaborowski (eds), Heidegger-Jahrbuch 2. Heidegger und Nietzsche, Freiburg/München: Alber Verlag, pp. 117–131. 18.

1. Suggested citation

2. Blok, V. (2009), 'Communication or Confrontation – Heidegger and Philosophical
3. Method', European Journal for the Philosophy of Communication 1: 1, pp. 41–55,
4. doi: 10.1386/ejpc.1.1.41/1

5.

6. Contributor details

7. Dr Vincent Blok is CEO of the Louis Bolk Institute (Driebergen, The
8. Netherlands). His current research focuses on the construction of meaning
9. in the era of nihilism and on the role of philosophy, art and science in this
10. era. His doctoral thesis *Rondom de vloedlijn. Filosofie en kunst in het machi-
11. nale tijdperk – een confrontatie tussen Heidegger en Jünger (Circling the Floodline.
12. Philosophy and Art in the Machine Age – A Confrontation Between Heidegger and 13. Jünger)* was published in 2005 (Aspekt publishers, The Netherlands).

14. Contact: Rozenboomlaan 27, 2271 VR Voorburg, The Netherlands.

15. Tel. +31 070 3632870

16. Fax. +31 343 515611

17. Mob. 06 11014203

18. E-mail: info@vincentblok.nl

19.

20. Notes

21. 42. 'der Wille zur Vorbereitung der Entscheidungen, denen das Abendland in diesem
22. und dem kommenden Jahrhundert entgegengeht' (GA 43: 282). Heidegger says
23. that the decisive question about the overcoming of metaphysics stays indeed in the 24. background in this lecture about the will to power as art and only comes up in the
25. differentiation between the guiding question and the grounding question, but is the
26. actual task of it (GA 43: 288–289).
27. 43. 'The thought of eternal return was not discovered in or calculated from other
28. doctrines. It simply came. But like all great thoughts it came only because, sur-
29. reptitiously, its way had been paved by long labours and great travail. ... The span
30. of the thinker's vision no longer ends at the horizon of his 'personal experiences'.
31. Something other than he himself looms there, abiding beneath, above, and beyond
32. him, something that no longer pertains to him, the thinker, but to which he can only
33. devote himself' (GA 44: 11–12; trans. 12–13).
34. 44. 'Wenn die Vorbereitung einer Denkerfahrung noch ein Entwurf genannt werden
35. könnte, dann wäre dieser Entwurf ein Sich-Wegwerfen von sich selbst, das in sich
36. schon ein Widerfahren ist: als Sich-Entwerfen weggeworfen, entrückt aus seinem
37. schon festgestellten Wesen. Das Werfende im Entwerfen ist nicht der Mensch – der
38. Mensch wird in die Ek-stasis entsetzt, in das Draußen schlechthin, und zwar aus dem
39. Draußen schlechthin heraus' (Oudemans 1998: 21).
40. 45. 'The new thinkers must attempt and tempt. That means they must put beings them-
41. selves to the test, tempt them with questions concerning their Being and truth' (GA
42. 43: 32; trans. 28).
43. 46. 'The solidity and binding quality of thought must undergo a grounding in the things
44. themselves in a way that prior philosophy does not know' (GA 43: 32; trans. 28).
45. 47. 'Truly to think as essential thought of this sort means to enter into the novel lucidity
46. opened up by the thought; it means to see all things in its light and to find oneself
47. totally ready and willing to face all the decisions implicated in the thought' (GA 44:
48. 11; trans. 13).
49. 48. 'Hier ist alles auf die einzige Frage nach der Wahrheit des Seyns gestellt: Auf das
50. Fragen. Damit dieser Versuch ein Anstoß werde, muß das Wunder des Fragens im Vollzug erfahren und zur Weckung und Stärkung der Fragekraft wirksam gemacht werden' (GA 65: 10).
49. Later on, Heidegger sees for himself that the will obstructs every exposure to the sense of being (vgl. Blok 2008).

liegt, daß er sich selbst sich erschließt, also nicht erst Überwindung durch ein dazukommendes Verhalten, etwa ein Beobachten des Willensvorganges und ein Nachdenken darüber, sondern der Wille selbst hat den Charakter des eröffnenden Offenhalts' (GA 43: 60)

41. 'Will as mastery of oneself is never encapsulation of the ego from its surroundings. Will is, in our terms, resolute openness, in which he who wills stations himself abroad among beings in order to keep them firmly within his field of action' (GA 43: 56; trans. 48).